City OKs using safety tax to fund new jail

Deal includes providing addiction recovery services, funding for preservation, economic development

BY MARK CAMPBELL

Madison City Council voted unanimously Tuesday to share a portion of the city's receipts from a new local public safety tax with Jefferson County to help pay for construction and operation of a new Jefferson County Jail.

The council approved the measure — pending county approval at a meeting scheduled for next week — as part of a more comprehensive interlocal agreement that will see the city help fund the new county jail while Jefferson County will contribute additional dollars toward city/county economic development and historic preservation.

As part of the agreement, the city has stipulated that the county must include either an in-patient or out-patient drug and addiction treatment program to help address the county's growing drug problems rather than just serve as a facility to incarcerate drug and other offenders.

Based on projected receipts from the new tax, which has been collected locally since Jan. 1, 2020 and is scheduled to run 20 years, the city will receive about $900,000 annually with $450,000 of that going to the county to help pay off the jail construction debt. The tax will also be collected in the county as well as Hanover, Dupont and Brooksburg for a combined $2,475,317 annually.

According to Madison Mayor Bob Courtney, arrests records show that the majority of local crimes are drug or addiction-related and a treatment program could be the key to reversing that trend, reducing recidivism and returning offenders who are now essentially a drain on public resources to productive roles in the community.

GoFundMe launched to study downtown grocery

BY COLLIN OVERTON

A grassroots effort is being made to bring a grocery store back to downtown Madison, but not in a fashion residents have been used to in the past.

Plans for a non-profit grocery may soon be in the works as a committee of residents supported by the Madison Main Street program launched a GoFundMe page Sunday to raise $6,000 for a feasibility study to analyze local demographics, income, transportation and other factors to determine the need for a downtown store.

A group of about 12 residents and representatives of the Main Street program have been meeting since the beginning of the year to discuss what a downtown store should look like, where it could be located and how it function, said Laura Arico, who heads the committee. The hope right now is to gather data and determine what kind of business model could sustain a downtown store, she said.

The downtown area's inability to sustain a chain grocery and the needs of low-income residents led the committee to the concept of a not-for-profit model, which has gained traction in some low-income communities in recent years. Although it's impossible to tell how that would look before feasibility data is gathered, essential items could be priced according to a tiered system so that lower-income residents have access to quality food, she said.

Other hopes for the store include education programs for at-risk groups and a community kitchen in a location that has yet to be determined. According to the GoFundMe page, the store would also support local growers and source food from school and community gardens.

Downtown has been without a grocery since the closure of the Kroger family-owned Ruler store at 120 East Second Street on March 31, 2018. For years the site was home to the Jay C Store, another Kroger branch, before becoming a Ruler in 2011. The parent company said the store was closed because it was "under performing," according to a previous Courier article.

Arico, a downtown resident and former manager of the Madison Area Growers CSA, originally got behind the idea because she was driving to Louisville to pick up groceries that fit her family's plant-based diet. One goal of a new store would be to offer more fresh, whole foods downtown so that out-of-town travel isn't necessary, she said.

"I'm a huge supporter of local business, and it bothered me that most of my money was going out of town," Arico said.

The survey money would ideally come from a grant from the Office of Community and Rural Affairs, but the COVID-19 emergency has made those funds unavailable, Arico said. The company that would conduct the survey and help establish a store is Good Food Markets, a non-profit store based in Washington D.C. that helps communities around the country establish stores.

She stressed that anyone is welcome to donate, but those facing financial hardship due to the pandemic should not feel pressured. The GoFundMe has raised $610 as of Wednesday at noon.

If a store can't be done, all funds raised will be donated toward the House of Hope Food Pantry, said Main Street Director Austin Sims Wednesday.

CHARLIE'S BEAT

The very first Charlie's Beat column to appear in this newspaper, dated Oct. 4, 2018, was about Jimmy Davis. So we're obviously long overdue to check back in with him and see how he's doing, especially in light of all the pandemic upheaval.

Jimmy Davis is one of a very small handful of Madison musicians who derive most of their personal income from performing live. Obviously anything with in-person audiences came to a screeching halt about seven weeks ago, bringing that income stream to zero. What's a musician to do?

"Well, I planted a huge garden," says Jimmy. "I've finished up work on two different new albums, one is a songwriter style and the other is rock. As soon as possible we'll get those new albums recorded and share them. And I've also

Mobilize Madison has been busy during shutdown

BY MARK CAMPBELL

Madison City Council Tuesday received a detailed report on some of the various tasks accomplished so far by additional workers hired through the city's emergency jobs program to put unemployed residents to work during the COVID-19 emergency.

The city created 36 jobs and to date those hires have worked 3,458 hours on projects the city normally would have gotten to later in the summer, if at all, and to replace workers who lost their regular jobs due to the pandemic shutdown.

The reach of the program has been across the city and through all departments from digitizing preservation documents for the city's archives to helping close cases from an evidence audit at Madison Police Department. Fire hydrants have been painted with many more to do and 197 calls have been answered by the city's outreach program to support residents who are staying at home during the virus pandemic.

The workers are all part of a larger Mobilize Madison Initiative that has also postponed 234 residential utilities disconnections in the water and sewage department, waived building permits and contractor registration fees and kept neighborhood revitalization applications moving forward to keep people working and mitigate the impact of the crisis.

In other business:

• Council agreed to apply for a gap loan being offered by the state to help secure the tax revenue stream of municipalities in lieu of the fact that payment of property taxes will be late this year.

According to Chief of Staff Mindy McGee, the city may be able to get by without the loan but the application will be submitted as a precaution in the event that the temporary shortfall hits harder than expected. The city normally starts receiving property tax receipts in June but that will be delayed until at least July this year. If the city does borrow money it must be paid off by the end of the year with interest.

• Council heard the third reading and adopted an ordinance to repeal and replace the Economic Development Revolving Loan Fund.

• Discussed the parks program in lieu of the social distancing restrictions related to the COVID-19 emergency. Courtney specifically said the city hopes to open the Crystal Beach Pool this summer season but that will come down to a decision of economics and to what

KSP arrests Bedford man after pursuit

BY COURIER STAFF REPORT

A Trimble County man has been arrested after leading Kentucky State Police on a 15-mile chase that involved at one point running a motorcyclist off the road.

According to court documents, Michael Durham, 42, was stopped by a KSP officer just before 7 p.m. on Monday in Bedford. Police said there were two warrants outstanding for Durham's arrest.

Michael Durham

When informed of the warrants by the officer and ordered to step out of the pickup, Durham allegedly replied "Come on, man!" and drove away, according to the police report.

State police troopers initiated a pursuit which saw Durham drive his red Ford Ranger pickup in and out of traffic. According to documents, Durham reached speeds of 86 mph during the chase and at one point ran a motorcyclist off the road.

The chase ended when Durham pulled into his own property on Harley Lane in Bedford. According to reports, he exited his truck and began running. A trooper fired a Taser, which was ineffective, then fired a second Taser that finally stopped Durham.

Durham then apparently resisted arrest and reached for the trooper's Taser. The trooper responded woth a "hand strike to his arm and face," according to the report, before Durham was subdued.

Durham was arrested and charged with fleeing or evading police in a motor vehicle, fleeing or evading police on foot, reckless driving, speeding 26 mph or more above the speed limit, first-degree wanton endangerment, resisting arrest, third degree assault of a police or probation officer, and operating a motor vehicle while under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

He allegedly admitted to smoking marijuana just before driving, and said he had no insurance on the truck.

The charges related to the arrest warrants have not been identified

Durham is currently being held in the Oldham County Detention Center.

Vevay's Swiss Wine Festival canceled due to COVID-19

BY COURIER STAFF REPORT

The COVID-19 pandemic has claimed another major Courier area festival with Wednesday's cancellation of the 49th annual Swiss Wine Festival in Vevay scheduled for Aug. 27-30.

After much discussion, the festival's board of directors made and announced its decision Wednesday morning on the event's Facebook page.

"It is with deep regret that we announce the 49th annual Swiss Wine Festival will be canceled. After much discussion, the board of directors have decided to not go through with the 2020 festival due to COVID-19. We feel that the health and safety of our event participants and our community is our top priority, and we believe given the current situation, canceling the event, that is less than three months away, is the responsible thing to do. We know that our decision will have a huge impact on our community and the local organizations that depend on the festival each year, but we assure you we did not come to this decision lightly. We realize some states are considering lifting restrictions but in these uncertain times, there is not a guarantee that all restrictions will be lifted in time for our festival, Aug. 27-30, 2020."

Organizers noted they will take this time to reflect on the event in order to deliver a "world-class experience" for the 2021 Swiss Wine Festival.

"We are eagerly looking forward to the best Swiss Wine Festival to-date," they said.

The group thanked its sponsors for their support and noted that with the uncertainty of the coronavirus emergency "we knew we could not in good faith ask our gracious sponsors to put forth their hard-earned money in these troubling times. We will keep in contact with each and every sponsor and vendor to discuss scheduling for the 2021 festival."

The board also reached out to the many volunteers and organizations who help make the festival a success while raising funds for their programs.

"Our event would not be possible without the many volunteers and organizations that contribute to putting on the festival each year, and the hundreds of hours of planning. Each year our goal is to make the festival better for the attendees, in the hopes that they will want to return each year. The Swiss Wine Festival has seen continued growth over the years and we would like to see it prosper for years to come," the statement said.

Madison man arrested on weapon, drug charges

Officer found man passed out with vehicle in drive, finger on trigger of loaded gun

BY COURIER STAFF REPORT

Madison Police arrested a local man Tuesday for felony possession of a firearm, drug charges and operating a vehicle while intoxicated after an officer discovered the man passed out behind the wheel of his vehicle at a hilltop gas station.

Mario Johnson-Hollins, 25, Madison, has been charged with felony possession of a firearm, dealing marijuana, possession of marijuana over 30 grams and operating a vehicle while intoxicated.

Madison Senior Patrolman Dylan Barnes found Johnson-Hollins passed out behind the wheel of his vehicle, at the exit of the Speedway gas station in the 400 block of Clifty Drive at approximately 7:27 p.m.

Upon investigating, Barnes found Johnson-Hollins to be in possession of a handgun, which was located on Hollins' lap with his finger on the trigger. Barnes and Sgt. Shawn Scudder and Patrolman Trent Smith, took Johnson-Hollins into custody. The handgun was found to be loaded, and the vehicle's gear shift was in drive.

Johnson-Hollins was transported to the Jefferson County jail where he awaits his initial court appearance. In addition to the marijuana, officers also seized U.S currency and paraphernalia as evidence.

The latest design for the new Jefferson County Jail.

Prior to Tuesday night's vote, Courtney invited Indiana Attorney General Curtis Hill to address city council and speak about a Jail Chemical Addiction Program (JCAP) that is currently in use in eight Indiana counties. Speaking via Zoom teleconferencing, Hill said the program, which was piloted at the Dearborn County Jail and now supported by his office, has so far shown great promise in helping offenders recover from drug addiction in a volunteer setting that provides both professional and group therapy and counseling while controlling costs to less than $14 per day per participant.

The Attorney General's office provides grant money to help get the program started but Hill said the program could easily be funded through a reallocation of money already being spent to house inmates. Participants are incarcerated in dedicated "therapeutic" pods away from the general jail population and must commit to at least a 90-day stay — most average around 120 days — in an "intense program" that involves "a lot of soul searching" with a zero tolerance for breaking program rules.

Hill said inmates who volunteer for the program emerge with the knowledge, coping skills and support to lead better lives. He said the Dearborn County program saw recidivism drop by 50% which also had a positive impact on local crime rates.

Courtney said Jefferson Circuit Judge D.J. Mote was unable to participate in Tuesday's meeting, but that the judge and former prosecutor had voiced his support for implementing a program like JCAP.

"This is one of the most impactful things we can do in this administration and one of the most cost efficient things we can do," Courtney said.

Jefferson County Commissioner David Bramer, who is heading up the county's jail committee, said proposals jail committee members are considering for the new jail on JA Berry Lane on Madison's hilltop all offer options that would allow separate pods to be dedicated to programs like JCAP and the current county jail located at the courthouse downtown would be another option for that or other special programs.

"We have some flexibility in the new jail as well as the old space we already have," Bramer said.

Following Hill's presentation, the council voted to pass the interlocal cooperation agreement with the county to share the public safety income tax. Courtney noted the city and county are "not setting a precedent" with the agreement because both have worked together on a number of other projects but Tuesday's deal was a product of months of study and negotiations and the "comprehensiveness of the agreement" goes beyond previous deals between the two largest governmental entities in the county.

As part of the agreement, Jefferson County will contribute $250,000 to the city's PACE Program to support preservation and revitalization and then fund $45,000 annually toward the program while appointing one board member to the PACE Grant Committee.

In addition, Jefferson County will contribute $40,000 annually toward joint city/county economic development activities to partially fund staffing and planning initiatives to retain and grow industry over the next 20 years.

"We appreciate the city's help," Bramer said. "The give and take is good for all of us."

Jail design delayed by tweaks

BY COLLIN OVERTON

The Jefferson County Jail Committee made more tweaks to the floor plan of the new jail Tuesday night as the design phase of the projects draws closer to its end.

The design presented by Scott Carnegie and other architects with firm DLZ Tuesday night was for an 81,300-square foot, 294-bed facility with general population concentrated in the northwest side, administrative offices and public lobby on the south side, kitchen and laundry in the center of the building and the inmate booking and medical areas situated in the eastern half of the building. Locations allocated for possible expansion have been identified in the east and west sides of the building.

After members of the committee made minor tweaks, like eliminating an employee fitness room, consolidating office space and flipping the locations of the squad room and armory, county council and jail committee member Ray Denning reminded the rest of the committee to keep in mind the Jail Chemical Addiction Program (JCAP) they would now have to make space for. Where that space would be and what it could additionally cost has not been determined, but that could be parceled out in the coming days, members concluded.

The biggest decision made Tuesday was leaving a 4,738 square-foot courtroom facility out of the master plan, although it could be added later as an alternate bid or expansion project down the road. Sheriff Dave Thomas said his department has seen firsthand how effective virtual arraignments can be conducted during the COVID-19 shutdown and agreed with others at the meeting that a separate facility seemed like an unnecessary strain on the budget.

The committee also determined it would not meet its May 7 projection for having the schematic plan finished as redesigns in recent meetings have pushed the process back a couple weeks, said Carnegie, who noted "we're real close."

Carnegie also announced the preliminary findings of a recent waterflow survey from Harrel-Fish Inc. that said a booster and fire pump was likely not necessary. That alone would save the project upwards of $100,000, said Jack Krouse, owner-representative on the project.

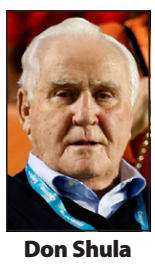
Shula remembered for 'playing within the rules'

BY STEVEN WINE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — Don Shula often said he wanted to be remembered for playing within the rules, and that's what happened Monday.

In the wake of his death at age 90, an outpouring of tributes from around the NFL saluted not only Shula's two Super Bowl championships and NFL-record 347 coaching victories, but also the way he won.



Don Shula

"He's one of the great credits to the game that has ever been," said Shula's longtime friendly rival, former Buffalo Bills coach Marv Levy. "The fact he was the winningest coach in the history of the league and did it by playing by the rules and honoring the game — certainly that is impressive. He'll be remembered for the success he had and also the type of person he was, for his ability and also his character."

NFL coaches, players and commissioners past and present were among those to praise Shula's legacy. The group included Jimmy Johnson and Bill Belichick, even though both were regarded frostily by Shula.

"Don Shula represented the highest standards of excellence by virtually any measure," former Commissioner Paul Tagliabue said. "His contributions to the NFL and the game of football extended far beyond his all-time record victory total. Don also was an all-time winner when it came to integrity, honesty and class."

Shula spent more than 20 years on the powerful competition committee, which evaluates playing rules, and he always valued his reputation for integrity.

"He would not bend the rules," said Pro Football Hall of Fame fullback Larry Csonka, one of Shula's favorite players. "If we cheated to win, that was considered the worst kind of loss as far as he was concerned."

Csonka recalled discovering the opponent's game plan in the locker room before a road game in the early 1970s. Csonka gave it to assistant coach Monte Clark to give to Shula, assuming the coach would take advantage of the inside information.

The Dolphins lost. Csonka said that when he later asked Clark what became of the game plan, the assistant coach responded: "Coach Shula said, 'Throw it out. If we can't beat them playing by the rules, we shouldn't win."

Because of Shula's reputation, his comments carried extra weight when he questioned Belichick's integrity in the wake of the New England Patriots' spying and deflated football scandals, referring to him in 2015 as "Belicheat."

There was no reference to their rift in a statement Monday from Belichick.

"Don Shula is one of the all-time great coaching figures, and the standard for consistency and leadership in the NFL," Belichick said.

Johnson also paid tribute, even though Shula harbored hard feelings toward the coach who succeeded him with the Dolphins in 1996.

"RIP, one of the greatest of all time ... Don Shula," Johnson tweeted. "He set the standard."

Others who followed Shula into the profession agreed.

"We lost one of the most iconic men in the history of NFL coaching in Don Shula," former Pittsburgh Steelers coach Bill Cowher tweeted. "His leadership and wisdom helped to guide me and many others who have made a life in coaching football. Thank you coach Shula. May your spirit and legacy live on forever."

Colts pass on exercising option on Hooker

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

INDIANAPOLIS — The Indianapolis Colts have decided not to exercise their fifth-year option on starting safety Malik Hooker, which could make him an unrestricted free agent after next season.

Team officials faced a Monday afternoon deadline to extend the deal but opted against it.

Hooker was Indy's first-round draft pick in 2017, No. 15 overall, and showed play-making ability — when he was on the field. The 24-year-old Ohio State alum started fast, earning a starting job as a rookie and picking off three passes in his first seven games.

Then the injuries mounted. He missed the final nine games of 2017 with a knee injury and has wound up missing 14 games over his first three seasons.

Last season might have been his best in the NFL. Hooker had 51 tackles and picked off two passes and recovered one fumble in 13 games.

After the season, general manager Chris Ballard called it a "solid" season for Hooker.

But if the Colts had exercised the option, Hooker's fifth-year salary would have been guaranteed if he had gotten hurt again.

"Last year, I really felt like Malik had a really good year. You could really feel his presence," coach Frank Reich said Monday on a Zoom call — before the decision became official.

"Physically, I felt Malik's presence on the field. Malik is not the most outgoing, bubbly personality (but) he's got a lot of juice and intensity in him and I think you really saw that come out last year when he was healthy."

Members of Southwestern's baseball team watch the action from the dugout during the 2018 season. High school baseball was canceled this spring but there is a hope that there will be a season of sorts for local players later this summer.

Local group hoping to bring baseball back this summer

BY DAVID CAMPBELL

The COVID-19 pandemic has wiped out the high school baseball season on both sides of the Ohio River, but a local group is hoping to get local players back on the field later this summer.

A group led by Madison Consolidated High School head baseball coach Tim Armstrong and assistant coach Joe Jenner have approached the City of Madison Parks Board about forming a league made up of high school players to begin play in mid- to late-July. The league would be open to all high school players who were enrolled in good standing for the 2019-20 school year, including graduated seniors.

"We really hate the idea that these guys had their seasons taken away, especially the seniors," Jenner said. "We were hoping to do something to bring some normalcy back."

As of now, the league is still in the planning stages and the Parks Board has yet to make a final decision but Jenner said the response has been very positive.

According to the plan, the league would be marketed to Jefferson County high school athletes as well as surrounding counties, such as Carroll and Trimble in Kentucky. Under IHSAA rules, only five players from any high school may participate on a team at a given time so the league will make sure that players are dispersed among the teams. All players would be signed up individually, not as a group.

Jenner said the hope is that teams could be formed in early July, after the state of Indiana's COVID final phase of response is lifted on July 4 with games beginning a few weeks later. The league would run into the fall, concurrent with the fall high school sports season.

"We'll play games on evenings and on Saturday evenings so that we wouldn't interfere with fall sports. We may even have a lot of Saturday doubleheaders, we'll just have to see," Jenner said. "Obviously high school fall sports would take precedence over the league. We just want to get guys back out there."

Madison head baseball coach Tim Armstrong is part of a group that is trying to start a local baseball league to begin play later this summer.

Jenner said that he has contacted several local baseball coaches to determine interest among their players. He also said that additional baseball coaches would be needed because IHSAA rules forbid current high school coaches from leading teams.

The league would be a City of Madison Parks league but the proposal is that the Madison High School baseball coaching staff will run the league at school facilities pending approval. The cost per player is still to be determined.

Any local players or coaches with questions about the proposed league, can call Jenner at 812-265-5132.

NAIA to launch women's varsity flag football

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Women's flag football will become a varsity sport for NAIA schools by next year, the organization announced Monday.

The National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics has secured a two-year partnership with the NFL and its NFL FLAG arm, and Reigning Champs Experiences (RCX). The NAIA will develop league infrastructure and operations for the first women's flag football competition governed by a collegiate athletics association.

"Football is for everyone," NFL Executive Vice President of Football Operations Troy Vincent said. "This groundbreaking and historic joint venture provides an opportunity for the values, fun and competitive environment of football to be enjoyed as a varsity sport by female student-athletes attending NAIA institutions across America."

The NAIA will host its first showcase open to female football athletes in late summer or early fall. The first competitive season will be held next spring, and the NAIA will host an emerging sport or invitational championship in the spring of 2022. An emerging sport in the NAIA is defined as at least 15 participating institutions, while an invitational is at least 25. A sport must have a minimum of 40 participating schools to be considered for full championship status.

"Increasing female participation in flag football has been a top priority for NFL FLAG," said Izell Reese, the president and general manager for RCX. "By teaming up with the NAIA, we're able to create even more opportunities for young women to continue the sport they love, and potentially receive scholarships to continue their education and compete at the next level."

degree crowd restrictions are relaxed going forward. The mayor said he anticipated crowd restrictions to remain in place for several more weeks with a relaxing of the numbers along the way but whether that will come in time to justify opening the pool this year remains to be seen.

• Heard a report that the city/county early weather warning siren system is being evaluated on its effectiveness and how sirens are used and in what circumstances. A social media-based survey could be coming to get feedback from residents on what is effective and what is not.

• Heard a report by Courtney that City Hall is now open and additional business will be reopened in phases beginning this week with gathering restriction limits increased to 25 people. However, he said residents should continue to isolate as much as possible, observe 6-foot social distancing recommendations, wear a face covering when in public, wash hands often, stay at home if you are sick and get tested immediately if you are showing coronavirus symptoms.

"We've done a very good job of keeping our positive cases to a minimum," Courtney said, encouraging people to continue on that path.

The issue with downtown grocery stores in the past has been keeping regular customers who do their bulk shopping there, she said. Most of the time, customers would stop by and grab soda and chips, but continue on to larger groceries on Madison's hilltop and other cities for the rest of their shopping.

A non-profit store would ideally serve that purpose for downtown residents without transportation or stable income, Sims said. Especially since the only other options are the Farmer's Market during season, the Dollar General store, which is limited options, and A Dattilo Fruit Company, which is primarily a fruit and vegetable wholesaler with limited retail hours.

"That's what's pretty scary, we're supposed to be a Stellar Community when we're on the brink of being a food desert," Sims said.

Taking time to grieve

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: I have been good friends with Wanda for over 20 years. Though our friendship has lasted a long time, it's not been without its trials. This is mostly because Wanda has a tendency to make everything about her.

Recently, my beloved mother passed away after a long illness. When that happened, Wanda called me — to tell me that it reminded her of her own mother's passing several years ago. She said this was very difficult for her, and she asked if I would be there for her during this time. Since then, she has called me twice to reminisce about her mother. She has not asked about me or my mother even once.

I am not unsympathetic to Wanda's feelings. I know she misses her own mom very much. Despite that, I feel like it's incredibly selfish of her to make my mom's passing about her grief. Though she's been selfish before, this seems like the worst thing she has done. It was my mom who just died, not hers! Am I being unreasonable here? I know there is no timeline for grief, so I'm not expecting Wanda to be "over it." I just might like a little acknowledgment of my own loss. Should I say anything to her? — My Mom's Death Is Causing My Friend Grief

Dear MMDICMFG: Where to begin. I am so incredibly sorry for your loss. And I'm sorry that you have to deal with your friend's behavior on top of that.

Psychologist and grief specialist Megan Devine writes about the tendency for people to make others' losses about them, in a post titled "But What About MY Grief" on her website Refuge in Grief:

"As a culture, we don't make space for loss. ... That means that nearly every person is carrying a backlog of unexpressed, un-acknowledged pain. Like a dammed up river, unexpressed pain seeks expression. Wherever it can. It's what happens when we hear someone else in pain, and we rush to say, 'Me, too! I lost (insert person's name) when I was young, so I know just how you feel.' Grief becomes a competition for the scarce resource of love and support."

While that might help explain Wanda's actions, it doesn't mean that you need to offer her that kind of support — quite the opposite. To avoid carrying your own "backlog" of pain, you must make your own feelings a priority now. Give yourself whatever you need during this time of grieving, including space from Wanda.

You are not obligated to say anything to her to explain your being distant; but if you'd like to, go ahead. What you told me really says it all: You feel for her, but you've just lost your own mom, and you need to focus on that. You've clearly got compassion in spades, so I have no doubt you'll handle it in a caring way.

Finding virtual support groups

ANNIE LANE
DEAR ANNIE

Dear Annie: While it is the best advice for stemming the COVID-19 pandemic, being told to isolate when you are a recovering alcoholic is the exact opposite of what the program Alcoholics Anonymous teaches us.

However, during this isolation, when most of the AA meeting places have been shut down, an alternative has blossomed. The meetings in my area have created many, many online meetings available at all times of the day, and they have been an absolute lifesaver for many. People can join from wherever they are. Just yesterday, I was in an online AA meeting and had the opportunity to hear someone share from India! A half a world away and his story is the same as mine! I have gone to several online meetings and "see" people that I would never have met otherwise. It has been a silver lining in this dark and lonely cloud. — Anonymous

Dear Anonymous: I've heard from several people what a blessing the online AA meetings have been during this time. Quarantine poses unique challenges for people recovering from addiction. To anyone facing that struggle: If you have access to a computer, please try a virtual support group. AA, Narcotics Anonymous, Families Anonymous, LifeRing and others all have options available.

Dear Annie: Are there any support groups out there for those of us whose spouses have survived a heart attack? My husband had a heart attack a few months ago, and I find myself in a constant state of worry and anxiety. I'm waking up at night to make sure he's still breathing, biting my tongue to not nag ("did you get any exercise today?") and sitting on my hands so I won't knock that fried bologna sandwich out of his hands. I don't want to burden the kids by talking to them about what I'm going through, and my sister and sister-in-law have their own worries. — Worried Wife

Dear Worried: Having worries of our own does not preclude us from hearing our friends'. I'm sure that your sister and sister-in-law would encourage you to open up to them, if they knew what you were dealing with. Still, it's a great idea to look for outside support. You might try MendedHearts, a nonprofit organization whose core purpose is to provide a "peer-to-peer support network for all heart patients and families affected by heart disease across the lifespan." Find more information at https://mendedhearts.org.

"Ask Me Anything: A Year of Advice From Dear Annie" is out now! Annie Lane's debut book — featuring favorite columns on love, friendship, family and etiquette — is available as a paperback and e-book. Visit http://www.creatorspublishing.com for more information. DAVIS added 120 new lessons to my guitar teaching website.

"I teamed up with some people in Nashville to build this program called Anyone Can Learn Guitar. It had about 120 online lessons before, but with all this new free time I've added 120 more and doubled the available content.

"I've also been on a bit of an exercise kick. Every day I'm doing 100 push-ups, 100 pull-ups and 300 air squats. My body fat is way down, and even my old leg injuries that they said would never heal completely have gotten better.

"But the thing I've really been happy with and surprised by is the live streaming shows I've been doing every evening. I get on Facebook Live right around 7:00 every night. I might take requests for songs, or I'll choose a musical theme and explore it. Every single set is different, so it stays fresh.

"I've been challenging myself with new material I haven't played before. And I might even wait until noon or so before I start learning the new songs for that night, so I have a deadline to work against. The response from fans and music lovers has been amazing.

"I'm excited to see what kinds of permanent change and innovation come out of this whole live streaming phenomenon, when the pandemic is finally over. I think it's very possible that live streaming will have staying power, even after we go back to performing live. We'll be doing both.

"I also think we're getting to hear from some great songwriters that we might never have heard before, maybe because they didn't want to play in front of a live audience. Now they can get their creativity out there for everyone to enjoy.

"But the most exciting part to me is the potential for collaboration. The online community we've all had to start living in has created a kind of songwriter collective, putting people together to write songs who might never have met otherwise. I think it's going to create an artistic explosion.

"Speaking of an explosion, I think everybody who's been stuck at home is about to bust to see some live music. The state of Indiana is starting to loosen things up, starting in late May and early June, so we want to be ready to go.

"Madison Music Movement, the new organization in town that supports and promotes live music, is planning a show called the Madison All-Star Revival at Red Bicycle Hall. We're aiming to be the very first live music show to celebrate the end of quarantine, so keep an eye out on Facebook and in Charlie's Beat for more details to come."

Charlie Rohlfing is a retired advertising man and partner in The Red Bicycle Hall music venue. Look for his distinctive fedora bobbing above the crowd anywhere live music is happening or reach him at crohlfing @madisoncourier.com.
